

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Misty Adoniou was a primary school teacher for 10 years before moving to Greece, where she taught and consulted in English Language Teaching for seven years. Misty now lectures at the University of Canberra. She has received numerous teaching awards, and is the lead writer of the national Teachers' Resource for English Additional Language/Dialect (EAL/D) learners. Misty sits on several national and international advisory groups and task forces, including positions with the ACT Government Schools Education Council (GSEC), the Australian Curriculum and Assessment and Reporting Authority (ACARA) and TESOL International.

Raquel Alexander is an Associate Professor in the Williams School of Commerce, Economics and Politics at Washington and Lee University. Prior to earning her PhD from the University of Texas — Austin, she worked as a tax consultant at KPMG. Her research focuses on tax policy related to personal savings and corporate taxation. Raquel has published numerous journal articles that relate to her research and currently serves on the editorial board of the Journal of the American Taxation Association.

Ryan Anderson is a PhD candidate in the School of Arts and Social Sciences at James Cook University. He holds a Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Psychology (Hons). His research interests include mathematics and statistics, evolutionary psychology and social psychology.

Sally Andrews is a Professor of Cognitive Psychology at the University of Sydney. Her research is based in cognitive psychology but integrates theories and methods from the domains of computer science, philosophy and neuroscience — the fields that define the discipline of cognitive science. In collaboration with students and researchers from a range of disciplines, she has used a variety of methods to investigate how we achieve the magic feat of translating the squiggles of print into meaning.

Phillip Baker is a Post-Doctoral Fellow at the Regulatory Institutions Network at the Australian National University. His areas of research include the impacts of globalisation (in particular trade liberalisation) on food systems, food consumption and public health, and the political/social determinants of health. Phillip holds a Masters of Health Science, Post-graduate Diploma in Public Health, and a Bachelor of Science from the University of Auckland. He was awarded a PhD in Population Health from the National Centre for Epidemiology and Population Health at the Australian National University in 2013.

Daniel Baldino is a political scientist, specialising in international relations, US politics, Australian foreign policy and intelligence sector reform. He completed his PhD at the University of South Australia. He also has a Bachelor of Arts, a Bachelor of Education (Secondary Business) and Masters in International Politics. In 2000, he was a Research Associate at the Library of Congress, Washington DC. In 2005 he was a visiting scholar at the Program in Arms Control, Disarmament, and International Security (ACDIS), University of Illinois, USA and in 2007 at the Security and Governance Program, East-West Center, Hawaii, USA. He has recently edited a book on democratic oversight of the intelligence sector in a range of democratic nations. In addition to a variety of other published chapters and papers regarding security strategy and foreign policy, he has written for Eureka Street, the Hawke Institute, The Diplomat, Arena magazine and the Evatt Foundation. He has been teaching at Notre Dame since 2008.

Lesley Barclay is a Professor of Rural Health at the University of Sydney. Lesley's projects have improved maternal child health services in urban and remote areas both in Australia and overseas. She is currently leading an NHMRC-funded study investigating a rural birth services. Lesley is the deputy chair of the National Rural Health Alliance, and is on the boards of the Local Health District and the Medicare Local. Lesley was awarded an AO in 2004, is a Distinguished Fellow of the Australian College of Midwives and one of the few foreign women designated a Samoan Chief.

John Barrick is an Associate Professor of Accountancy at Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, where he has worked since 2009. He is a Certified Professional Accountant (Washington State Board of Accountancy 1994) and worked as a tax policy accountant on the Joint Committee on Taxation (2007–2009). He is the author of Taxation of Individuals and Business Entities (2010). John holds a PhD in Business Administration and Accounting from the University of Nebraska, Lincoln.

Craig Batty teaches screenwriting at RMIT University, and is Creative Practice Research Leader for the School of Media and Communication. He is a screenwriter, script editor and script consultant, and has worked on various film, television and online drama projects. He has written, co-written and edited eight books, including: Movies that Move Us: Screenwriting and the Power of the Protagonist's Journey (2011), Screenplays: How to Write and Sell Them (2012), The Creative Screenwriter: Exercises to Expand Your Craft (2012) and Screenwriters and Screenwriting: Putting Practice into Context (2014).

Alastair Blanshard holds the Paul Eliadis Chair of Classics and Ancient History at The University of Queensland. He has taught at Oxford, Reading, and Sydney Universities and is the author of three books and numerous articles on topics including the Roman orgy, Greek statuary and the popularity of abdominal muscles, and representations of Greece and Rome in cinema.

Philip Branch is a Senior Lecturer in Networking and Telecommunications and Acting Director of the Centre for Advanced Internet Architectures at Swinburne University of Technology. Phillip's research and teaching interests include security, wireless communication and the application of machine learning to network management tasks. He has a PhD from Monash University, a BSc and MTech from the University of Tasmania and a number of industry certifications.

Barry Brook is a distinguished environmental scientist and modeller at the University of Adelaide's Environment Institute. He has published three books, numerous scientific papers, and regularly writes articles for the media. Barry has received many awards including the Australian Academy of Science Fenner Medal (2006) and the Community Science Educator of the Year (2010). He has developed extensive networks in energy analysis, including technical presentations to joint committees of the Australian Institute of Energy, Engineers Australia and the Australian Nuclear Association.

Fabrizio Carmignani is a Professor of Economics with the Griffith Business School at Griffith University. Previously he held positions at the University of Queensland (2009–2012), the United Nations (2002–2008), and the University of Milano-Bicocca (2001–2002) He holds a PhD in Economics from the University of Glasgow. His areas of research include applied macroeconomics, economic growth, development economics, and the economics of conflict.

Shaun Carney is an Adjunct Associate Professor at the School of Political and Social Inquiry at Monash University. Shaun is a columnist with the Herald Sun, and was associate editor and chief political columnist at The Age (1997–2012). He is the author of Peter Costello — The New Liberal (2001), and Australia in Accord — Politics and Industrial Relations Under the Hawke Government (1998).

Brad Carter teaches and conducts research in physics and astronomy at the University of Southern Queensland. His current research focus is on stellar astronomy and planetary systems, and he is working on the use of robotic and remote-access telescopes to support the education and research training of distance education students.

Jenny Chesters completed her PhD in 2009 and is currently employed as a Research Fellow at the University of Canberra. Previously she worked on various projects at the Research School of Economics at the Australian National University and at the Institute for Social Science Research at the University of Queensland.

Steven Crimp leads a multidisciplinary team exploring and evaluating options to increase resilience of Australian cropping systems to climate variability and change. He joined CSIRO in 2006 as a climate applications scientist tasked with assisting farmers and farmer groups to improve on-farm climate risk management. During this time he has led a range of research projects working with farmers both in Australia and internationally to enhance current management practises to cope with the challenges of climate variability and change.

Tim Crowe is a nutrition academic within the School of Exercise and Nutrition Sciences at Deakin University, and is also an Accredited Practising Dietitian. He teaches across the undergraduate and postgraduate programs in nutrition dietetics in the areas of nutritional physiology, as well as the applied role of nutrition in disease prevention and management. He is actively involved in several areas of nutrition research, including specialised nutrition in the prevention of surgical complications, malnutrition identification, and nutrition support in wound healing.

Hernán Cuervo is a lecturer at the Melbourne Graduate School of Education and a senior researcher in the Youth Research Centre at The University of Melbourne. Hernán is the author of Young People Making it Work: Continuity and Change in Rural Places (2012) and has written numerous journal articles and research reports. He holds a PhD from the University of Melbourne, and a Bachelor degree from the University of Buenos Aires.

Bronwen Dalton is the Director of the UTS Centre for Cosmopolitan Civil Societies, Coordinator of the Masters of Community Management Program, and Chair, Australian and New Zealand Third Sector Researchers. She is on the boards of the Department of Foreign Affairs' Australia Korea Foundation; the National Volunteering Research Advisory Group; Volunteering NSW and Volunteering Australia and the publications committee of the US Association for Research on Nonprofit Organizations and Voluntary Action (ARNOVA) and is Regional Vice-President, Oceania of the International Council of Voluntarism and Civil Society.

Simon Darcy is a Professor of Management specialising in inclusive organisational practices across the Events, Sport and Tourism sectors at the Business School — University of Technology, Sydney. Simon's work is characterised by an evidence-based approach to changing business, government and not for profit sector practices. He is currently working on research relating to the National Disability Insurance Scheme and National Disability Strategy. As both an academic and a person with a high level of disability, Simon brings a unique perspective to understanding disability issues and the rights of all people to fully participate in community life. Among his other roles he is also a member of the Disability Council of NSW and the advisory body to the Minister for Disability.

Glyn Davis has been Vice-Chancellor and Principal of the University of Melbourne since January 2005, and is Professor of Political Science in the Faculty of Arts. Professor Davis holds first class honours from the University of New South Wales and a Doctorate of Philosophy from the Australian National University. He undertook postgraduate appointments as a Harkness Fellow at the University of California, Berkeley, the Brookings Institution in Washington and the John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard.

Alan Duffy is a Research Fellow at Swinburne University of Technology. Alan is a theoretical astrophysicist and cosmologist, investigating how galaxies form, the nature of dark matter and the large scale properties of the universe. He holds a PhD and MPhys from the University of Manchester and has been a Postdoctoral Research Associate at the University of Western Australia (2009–2012) and a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at the University of Melbourne (2012–2014). Alan has written numerous journal articles and presented talks at universities, conferences and public events, as well as being a regular on ABC Breakfast News rounding up the latest in space science.

Graham Edgar is a marine ecologist at the University of Tasmania, from where he graduated with an honours degree and PhD in marine biology. Graham also holds a BSc from the University of Sydney. He was awarded the 2014 Eureka Prize in Environmental Science, the 2011 Silver Jubilee Award by the Australian Marine Sciences Association, and the 2010 Fulbright Tasmania Scholarship, which saw him research marine protected areas in the US. Graham has written many science-based articles and his books, Australian Marine Life and Australian Marine Habitats, won Whitley Awards. He is President of the charitable NGO Reef Life Survey Foundation.

Peter Ellerton is the Director of the Critical Thinking Project at the University of Queensland, where he is also a Lecturer in critical thinking. Peter holds a Master of Contemporary Science from the Australian National University, a postgraduate degree in Philosophy and a degree in Education. He is currently completing his PhD at the University of Queensland. Peter is the former Head of Experimental Science at the Queensland Academy of Science, Mathematics and Technology. In 2008, he won the Australian Skeptics $10,000 prize for critical thinking.

Baden Eunson is an academic and businessperson who holds several degrees from Monash University, where he is currently completing a PhD in the field of Plain English and jargon. Through his companies, Baden publishes manuscripts for books, ebooks and journalism. He has also published numerous articles about Plain English, communication and media, and writes a business column. His next book is C21: Communicating in the 21st Century, 4th. edn., Wiley, 2015. Previously, Baden ran the Professional Writing program at Monash University (2002–2010).

Suzie Ferrie is a Clinical Affiliate at the University of Sydney where she is currently completing a PhD looking at methods of nutritional assessment for critically ill patients. She holds a Master of Nutrition and Dietetics from the University of Sydney, and a Bachelor of Arts in Philosophy (Hons 1) from the University of New England. Susie has written numerous journal articles and contributed to several books. She also works as a Critical Care Dietitian at the Royal Prince Alfred Hospital.

Malcolm Forbes is a Medical Doctor and Adjunct Lecturer at James Cook University. He is the recipient of a National Health and Medical Research Council Postgraduate Scholarship and is currently undertaking public health research at the Cairns Institute.

Craig Fry is an Associate Professor in the Centre for Cultural Diversity and Wellbeing at Victoria University. Craig leads the Culture and Values in Health Research Program, and is a Research Associate of the Institute of Sport, Exercise and Active Living at Victoria University. He has trained in psychology, public health and applied ethics, and has worked in a variety of settings including community, health services, prison, policy and research institutes. Craig has published numerous journal articles and contributed to many book chapters and reports.

Peter Gahan is a Professor of Management and the Director of the Centre for Workplace Leadership at The University of Melbourne. Peter graduated with a Bachelor of Commerce (Hons) from The University of New South Wales and holds a PhD from The University of Melbourne. He has previously held academic appointments at The University of New South Wales, the University of Southern California, the European University Institute, Deakin and Monash universities.

Michelle Grattan is one of Australia's most distinguished political journalists. She has been a member of the Canberra parliamentary press gallery for over 40 years, and has covered the most significant stories in Australian politics. Michelle was the first female editor of an Australian metropolitan newspaper during her editorship at The Canberra Times. She currently holds an academic position at the University of Canberra and is Associate Editor (Politics) and Chief Political Correspondent at The Conversation. In 2004, Michelle was made an Officer of the Order of Australia (AO).

Jenny Graves is a Distinguished Professor at La Trobe University, Professor Emeritus at the Australian National University and Thinker-in-Residence at the University of Canberra. She is a Fellow of the Australian Academy of Science, serving on the Executive for eight years. Jenny is an evolutionary geneticist who exploits the genetic diversity of Australia's unique mammals as a source of genetic variation to study the organisation, function and evolution of mammalian genomes. This has led to new theories of the origin and evolution of human sex chromosomes and sex determining genes.

Peter Harrison is the founding Director of the Marine Ecology Research Centre at Southern Cross University. He has been researching and teaching a wide range of marine science and ecology programs for more than 30 years, with key research interests in coral reef ecology and cetaceans. Peter has published more than 150 scientific research papers, books, invited major review chapters and major reports, which have been cited more than 4,600 times.

Nick Haslam is a social psychologist whose research areas focus on social perception, prejudice and mental health. Nick has written several books including Psychology in the Bathroom, Introduction to Personality and Intelligence, and Values and Vulnerabilities. He is currently Professor and Head of the School of Psychological Sciences at the University of Melbourne. He holds a PhD from the University of Pennsylvania.

Ben Heard is a doctoral student at the University of Adelaide, examining pathways for the decarbonisation of Australian electricity with the inclusion of nuclear energy. As the Director of ThinkClimate Consulting (currently in hiatus), he delivered modelling of carbon neutral pathways for South Australia's largest local government. Ben is one of Australia's most prominent nuclear advocates, presenting his work to audiences around Australia. He has written on nuclear power extensively for print and online publications, and his advocacy website, Decarbonise SA, has become a popular resource.

Eureka Henrich is a historian of migration to Australia with interests in memory, material culture, identity and public history. Her PhD thesis, which tracked how Australian museums exhibited migration histories in the last quarter of the 20th century, was awarded the UNSW Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences Best Doctoral Thesis Prize for 2012. Eureka is now based in the UK, where she is the 2014 Rydon Fellow in Australian Politics and Political History at the Menzies Centre for Australian Studies at King's College London.

Dennis Hemphill is an Associate Professor in Sport Ethics in the College of Sport and Exercise Science at Victoria University. Dennis is a Research Associate of the Institute of Sport, Exercise and Active Living and serves on the University's Human Research Ethics Committee. He is a member of the International Association for the Philosophy of Sport and also serves on the editorial board of the journal, Performance Enhancement & Health. His research interests include drugs, sport ethics and health, and anti-doping policies.

Mark Howden leads a team of researchers working with community, government and industry stakeholders to enable agriculture, fisheries, forestry, other primary industries and mining, to prepare for and adapt to the effects of climate change and ongoing climate variability. Mark's specialist areas are: impacts of climate variability and change on agricultural and urban systems, the dynamics of grazed and cropped ecosystems and development of innovative and sustainable farming systems.

Jane Louise Hunter has a professional background in pedagogy, technology integration in learning in schools, teacher professional learning and curriculum studies. Jane has received several awards for outstanding contributions to student learning in universities, including an Office of Learning and Teaching award in 2013. Her doctoral study of exemplary teachers' knowledge of technology integration in NSW primary and secondary public schools developed a new model of technology integration known as “High Possibility Classrooms”. A book detailing this model will be published by Routledge in 2015.

Emma A. Jane (previously known as Emma Tom) is a senior lecturer in media and communication at the University of New South Wales. Her research interests include the ethics of emerging technologies and cyberhate — especially misogyny in new media contexts. Prior to commencing her academic career, she spent nearly 25 years working in the print, electronic, and online media. Emma has written six books including a novel, Deadset, which won the Commonwealth Writers’ Prize for Asia and the South Pacific for Best First Novel in 1997. Her seventh book — Modern Conspiracy: The Importance of Being Paranoid was co-authored with Chris Fleming and was published by Bloomsbury in August, 2014. She is currently updating the fifth edition of Cultural Studies: Theory and Practice for Sage, after which she will be listed as a co-author with the current author, Chris Barker.

Michael Kasumovic is an ARC Future Fellow and Senior Lecturer at UNSW. Michael holds a PhD in Evolutionary Ecology from the University of Toronto. Michael’s research explores the evolution of mating systems in general, and how evolution has shaped human societies and cultures and how we respond to technological changes.

Richard Keegan is an Assistant Professor in Sport and Exercise Psychology at the University of Canberra. Peter also holds a PhD and MSc from Loughborough University (UK), and a degree in psychology from the University of Bristol. He is a qualified and registered psychologist (AHPRA, Australia and HCPC, UK), and works with athletes across a full range of levels and disciplines. Richard is the Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Applied Case Studies in Sport and Exercise.

Alan Kohler is an Adjunct Professor of Business at Victoria University, where his role includes promoting the value of financial education and contributing to curriculum development in the College of Business. He has been a financial journalist since 1971, for The Australian Financial Review, The Age and The Sydney Morning Herald. He is currently the Editor in Chief of Eureka Report, an online publication for investors, and Business Spectator, a business news and commentary publication.

Philip Kokic collaborates with other CSIRO scientists on a range of projects in climate science and adaptation to climate risk. Philip has worked as a statistician in various academic institutes, for government and private industry, both in Australia and overseas. His work has been published in over 50 refereed papers and reports, often in collaboration with researchers from other disciplines. Philip is a member of the Statistical Society of Australia and the International Association of Survey Statisticians.

Keith Lyons is the Director and Adjunct Professor of Sport Studies at the University of Canberra's Research Institute for Sport and Exercise (UCRISE). He holds a PhD in Educational Studies from the University of Surrey. Peter's research interests include coaching and learning, high performance sport, sustainable communities, and the lifelong participation in physical activity and sport.

Peter McEvoy is a clinician, applied researcher, and lecturer in the area of clinical psychology at Curtin University. Peter's research examines the factors that maintain emotional disorders such as anxiety and depression. He is particularly interested in the provision and evaluation of evidence-supported group and individual psychological treatments. Peter holds a PhD, Master of Clinical Psychology and a Bachelor of Science (Hons) from the University of Western Australia.

Jim Macnamara is Professor of Public Communication at the University of Technology Sydney. Jim came to this position after a distinguished 30-year career in professional communication practice spanning journalism, public relations, advertising and media research. His professional career included founding and serving as the CEO of the Asia Pacific franchise of CARMA International, a global media analysis firm. Jim holds a PhD in media research from the University of Western Sydney.

Simon Marginson is a Professor of International Higher Education at the Institute of Education, University of London, and a Professorial Associate of the Centre for the Study of Higher Education at the University of Melbourne. Simon was awarded the Chancellor's Prize for Excellence when he received his PhD from University of Melbourne in 1996. Simon's research focuses on international and global aspects of higher education. He has published numerous academic articles, written three books and is a regular public and media commentator.

Francis Markham commenced a PhD studentship at the Fenner School of Environment and Society at the Australian National University in 2013, where his research uses geographic methods to investigate the local impacts of poker machines. Previously, he was a research associate at the Menzies School of Health Research in Darwin (2011–2012), where he worked on an ARC Linkage project entitled "Gambling-related harm in Northern Australia: A GIS-based spatiotemporal analysis of venue catchments". He holds a Bachelor of Arts/Bachelor of Science (Hons) from the Australian National University.

Jason Mazanov is a Senior Lecture at the School of Business at the University of New South Wales. Previously Jason has worked for the Australian Public Service (ATO/CSA and DVA) as an Executive Management Consultant and Consultant Psychometrician. His research interests include the causes and consequences of drug use in sport, and the non-sexy side of sports doping. He is a Founding Editor of Performance Enhancement and Health, and Senior Member of the International Network for Humanistic Doping Research.

Wolfgang Merkel is a Professor of Political Science at the Humboldt University, Berlin, and an associate of the Sydney Democracy Network at the University of Sydney. Wolfgang is also the Director of the research unit “Democracy: Structures, Performance, Challenges” at the Social Science Research Centre Berlin (WZB). He is a member of the Berlin-Brandenburg Academy of Sciences and Humanities and advisor to many European governments. Wolfgang is a non-party member of the German Democratic Party (SPD) and the German Research Foundation (DFG).

Kit Messham-Muir is a Senior Lecturer in Art History and Theory at University of Newcastle. In 2000 he was awarded a PhD in Art History and Theory from the University of New South Wales. He has won several awards for his teaching and has been published frequently.

Gavin Moodie is an Adjunct Professor of RMIT University, and has worked in Australian universities for 35 years, mostly in administration. Gavin has published over 50 refereed articles, chapters and encyclopedia entries on tertiary education policy and a book, From Vocational to Higher Education: An International Perspective (2008). He is currently investigating the effects on universities of an earlier information revolution, Gutenberg's invention of printing in 1450.

Rob Moodie is a Professor of Public Health at the University of Melbourne. Previously he was the inaugural Director of Country Support for UNAIDS in Geneva (1995–1998) and the CEO of VicHealth (1998–2007). He chaired the National Preventative Health Taskforce (2008–2011) and is a member of the World Health Organization's Expert Panel on Health Promotion. He has co-edited and co-authored several books including Promoting Mental Health, Hands on Health Promotion (2004) and more recently, Recipes For A Great Life — with Gabriel Gate. He became a Member of the Order of Australia for significant service to medicine through HIV/AIDS research, and through leadership roles in population health and disease prevention programs.

Christine Nicholls is a writer, curator and Senior Lecturer in Australian Studies at Flinders University, where she also coordinates Postgraduate Humanities students. Christine has published numerous articles about visual art, linguistics, and Aboriginal education. She has been speaking about these topics in Australia and overseas for several decades. She is the Australian Editor of the visual arts magazines, Asian Art News and World Sculpture News, both based in Hong Kong.

Barbara Norman is the Foundation Chair of Urban and Regional Planning at the University of Canberra. She is a life fellow and past national president at the Planning Institute of Australia, Chair of the ACT Climate Change Council and Deputy Chair of the ACT Regional Development Committee. Barbara's research areas include coastal planning, sustainable cities, urban and regional planning, climate change adaptation, and coastal and urban governance.

Jesse Olsen earned his PhD in organisational behaviour from the Scheller College of Business at the Georgia Institute of Technology in Atlanta, USA. His research focuses on diversity management, virtual work, and cross-cultural management. He has published his work in Organizational Behavior and Human Decision Processes, Human Resource Management, and the Journal of Organizational Behavior, and he is on the editorial board of the International Journal of Human Resource Management.

Joanne Orlando is a Senior Lecturer in Educational Technology at the University of Western Sydney. She graduated with a PhD from the University of Technology Sydney in 2010. Her research focuses on understanding our techno-social lives, in particular the ways technology contributes to how we learn and communicate, and to our family and social lives. She has published multiple opinion pieces in The Sydney Morning Herald and The Age and regularly speaks about her research in the media.

Rosemary Overall is a Lecturer in Communication Studies at the University of Otago. Rosemary has a wide range of research interests including gender studies, popular music, Japanese studies and affective belonging. She has published several books including Affective Intensities in Extreme Music Scenes: Cases from Australia and Japan (2014) and The Pink Palace, Policy and Power: Home-making Practices and Gentrification in Northcote (2009), and numerous journal articles. Rosemary holds a PhD in Cultural and Japanese studies from the University of Melbourne.

Gemma Paech is a Research Associate for the Centre for Sleep Research at the University of South Australia. In early 2014 she received her PhD for the thesis titled The Circadian and Homeostatic Influence on Sleep Quantity and Quality from the University South Australia. Her research interests include the circadian and homeostatic regulation of sleep and performance, the circadian influence in the development of disease, sleep restriction and sleep deprivation, shiftwork and fatigue and the identification of fatigue biomarkers.

Keith Parry is a lecturer in Sport Management at the University of Western Sydney, teaching within the School of Business. His research interests are based around the study of sport, with a focus on sports fandom and fan engagement, and he has used a variety of qualitative methods to study these. He has published with international colleagues and has recently co-edited a text examining the relationship between football codes and community. Keith has a background in sports coaching and sports development and continues to be actively involved within the sports industry. Keith is currently completing a PhD, which examines the constructions of sports heroes within the setting of a new sports team. You can follow Keith on Twitter at @sportinaus.

Rob Pensalfini is a Senior Lecturer in Linguistics and Drama at the University of Queensland, and the Artistic Director of the Queensland Shakespeare Ensemble. He completed his doctorate in theoretical linguistics and Australian Aboriginal languages at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1997. He has published two books and about a dozen articles on Aboriginal languages, and half a dozen articles on theatre and actor training. He is currently writing a book on the global phenomenon of Prison Shakespeare. Rob has worked professionally as an actor, director, musician, and teacher in both the USA and Australia, and was inducted as an Arts Queensland Culture Champion in late 2013. He is the founder and director of the Shakespeare Prison Project, Australia's only Prison Shakespeare Program, which has been running in high security men's prisons in Queensland since 2006.

Suwendrini Perera is a Professor of Cultural Analysis in the Department of Cultural Studies at the School of Media and Culture & Creative Arts, and the Acting Director of the Australia-Asia-Pacific Institute at Curtin University. She completed her Bachelor of Arts degree at the University of Sri Lanka and her PhD at Columbia University, New York. Since coming to Australia she has published many articles and is the author/editor of several books of cultural and critical studies on issues of race and ethnicity, multiculturalism, critical whiteness studies and Asian-Australian studies. Her most recent publication is an anthology, coedited with Professor Sherene Razack of the University of Toronto, titled At the Limits of Justice: Women of Colour on Terror.

Gina Perry is an Australian psychologist and writer. Her articles have been published in The Age and The Australian, and her short fiction has appeared in a number of Australian literary magazines. Gina's co-production of an ABC Radio documentary about obedience experiments, Beyond the Shock Machine, won a Silver World Medal at New York Festival's radio awards in 2009. She is currently completing her PhD at the University of Melbourne.

Barbara Preston has been an independent researcher and consultant since 1991, following experience as a union research officer and public servant. Barbara's research interests include professional workforce analysis, professional practice and regulation, and schools policy. She is currently undertaking doctoral studies at the University of Canberra on occupational forecasts for school teachers and professional nurses and midwives. Barbara is also an active member of a number of professional research associations.

Joseph Pugliese is a Research Director of the Department of Media, Music, Communication and Cultural Studies at Macquarie University. Joseph's research and teaching are principally oriented by issues of social justice. He deploys critical and cultural theories in order to examine the relationship between knowledge and power, issues concerned with discrimination and injustice, and regimes of colonialism and empire. He examines these issues in the context of everyday cultural practices, the state, institutions of power such as law, and the interface of bodies and technologies.

Alex Reilly is the Director of the Public Law and Policy Research Unit at the University of Adelaide. He has held academic positions in the law schools at Adelaide, Macquarie and Murdoch Universities. He teaches and researches in migration law and policy, constitutional law, legal theory, and Indigenous legal issues. Alex is also a member of the Work and Employment Regulation research specialisation in the law school, and is an associate of the Australian Population and Migration Research Centre.

Nick Rowley is an Adjunct Professor at the Sydney Democracy Network at the University of Sydney. Nick worked as an advisor to Premier of NSW Bob Carr (1995–2004), UK Prime Minister Tony Blair (2004–2006), and is currently a strategic policy consultant to business and NGO clients in Australia and overseas. Over 15 years, he has worked for the Australian and British governments on sustainability, climate change and broader policy and political strategy.

Alex Russell completed his PhD in the School of Psychology at the University of Sydney. His research examines taste and smell perception, with an emphasis on wine perception and description. He is currently a Research Affiliate at the University of Sydney and a Lecturer in the Centre for Gambling Education and Research at Southern Cross University.

Jim Salinger holds a PhD from Victoria University of Wellington and a Masters of Philosophy in environmental law from the University of Auckland. Jim has researched and analysed climate change and its variability for 35 years. He worked for the New Zealand Meteorological Service (1982–2009) and the National Institute of Water and Atmospheric Research (1992–2009). With other climate scientists he received the 2007 Nobel Peace Prize for contributions to the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change reports. In 2012 he was a visiting professor at Stanford University. Jim is currently an Honorary Research Associate in Climate Science at the University of Auckland and recently edited Living in a Warmer World: How a Changing Climate Will Affect Our Lives (2013)

Rick Sarre is a Professor of Law and Criminal Justice at the University of South Australia's Law School. He completed undergraduate studies in Adelaide (Law School) in 1976, the USA (Graceland University, 1979) and a Masters degree in Canada in the 1983, and received his doctorate from the University of Canberra in 2002. He has been teaching law and criminology for 30 years in addition to five years of legal practice. He currently serves as the President of the Australian and New Zealand Society of Criminology. He also served three years on the Victim Support Service (SA) board, and is currently on the Offenders Aid and Rehabilitation Services of SA board. He is a Vice-President of the Adelaide University Football Club. He has been a member of the ALP for 27 years and was the President of the Norwood Sub-Branch of the party for 5 years until 2012. In 2010, he stood as the candidate for Labor in the federal seat of Sturt.

Christopher Scanlon is a writer and commentator whose work has been widely published in Australian publications including The Age, The Australian, and The Monthly. Christopher graduated from Monash University with a PhD in politics in 2004. He developed and is production editor of www.upstart.net.au, and was previously the co-editor and online editor of Arena magazine. Before joining La Trobe University in 2008, Christopher worked at RMIT University's Globalism Institute, conducting research on community health and wellbeing.

Fabio Serpiello is a Lecturer in Advanced Sports Physiology at Victoria University. Fabio joined Victoria University in 2008 as a PhD student, funded by the Endeavour Europe Award. He holds a Bachelor degree and Masters degree in Sport and Exercise Science from the University of Milan, Italy. In 2011, Fabio was a recipient of a Joao Havelange Research Scholarship, awarded by the Federation Internationale de Football Association (FIFA) and the International Centre for Sport Studies (CIES).

Emma Sherry is a Senior Lecturer at La Trobe University Centre for Sport and Social Impact, specialising in the area of sport management and sport development. Emma holds a Bachelor of Arts from the University of Melbourne, and a Masters of Business (Sport Management) and PhD from Deakin University. Her PhD studies investigated the conflict of interest in the Australian Football League, and her current research areas include community development through sport activities, disability sport programs and barriers to female sport participation.

Patrick Stokes is a Lecturer in Philosophy at Deakin University and has previously held research fellowships in Denmark, America and the UK. He is also an honorary Research Fellow at the University of Hertfordshire. His areas of research include personal identity, philosophy of death and remembrance, and moral psychology. Patrick is a regular contributor Triple R, ABC Radio and The Drum. He is the author of The Naked Self (2015) and Kierkegaard's Mirrors (2010), and co-editor of Narrative, Identity, and the Kierkegaardian Self (2015) and Kierkegaard and Death (2011).

Elaine Tor is a PhD candidate at Victoria University and the Australian Institute of Sport (AIS). Her doctoral project is related to swimming biomechanics and is a collaborative project between Victoria University, Swimming Australia and the Australian Institute of Sport. Elaine has also worked at the AIS Aquatic Testing, Training and Research Unit for the past five years and assists with the implementation of biomechanical services and research for athletes to enhance performance in elite swimming. Her research interests are competition analysis, the swimming start and pacing in swimming.

Michael Vagg is a Fellow of the Australasian Faculty of Rehabilitation Medicine (RACP) and a Fellow and Board Member of Faculty of Pain Medicine (ANZCA). Michael is also a Clinical Senior Lecturer at the Deakin University School of Medicine, Geelong. He has been a visiting Medical Specialist at the Barwon Health Orthopaedic Rehabilitation Service (2005–2014), and remains at the Barwon Health Pain Management Unit and in private practice in Geelong.

Srikumar Venugopal is a Lecturer in the School of Computer Science and Engineering at the University of New South Wales, Sydney, and a researcher in the Service-Oriented Computing group. He graduated with a PhD from the University of Melbourne in 2006. His research interests lie in the area of large-scale distributed systems (e.g. clouds, grid), specifically in the topics of resource management and scheduling, application development and middleware.

Nicole A. Vincent is an Associate Professor of Philosophy, Law, and Neuroscience at Georgia State University. Nicole is a philosopher whose areas of research include neuroethics, neurolaw, ethics, philosophy of tort and criminal law, and political philosophy. She holds a PhD from the University of Adelaide and has been affiliated with the Philosophy Section at Technische Universiteit Delft in the Netherlands since 2007. She was a research fellow in the Department of Philosophy at Macquarie University in Sydney (2011–2013), which saw her complete the project “Reappraising the Capacitarian Foundation of Neurolaw”.

Kevin Volpp is the Director of the Center for Health Incentives and Behavioral Economics at the Leonard Davis Institute. He is a Professor of Medicine at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, and a Principal at VAL Health. Kevin is also a board-certified general internist and practicing physician at the Philadelphia VA Medical Centre. He has published numerous articles in peer-review journals and media outlets. Kevin has won several awards, including the Presidential Early Career Award for Scientists and Engineers, and the British Medical Journal Group Award for Translating Research into Practice.

Sally Weller is an Australian Research Council Future Fellow at Monash University. She is an economic geographer whose research focuses on developing a spatialised interpretation of the ongoing restructuring of the Australian economy. Sally is interested in labour market and industrial restructuring, cultural industries, regional economies, globalisation and the process of socio-economic change. Her Fellowship project (2012–2016) is a comparative study of the “Transition to a Low Carbon Economy” in two vulnerable regions: Victoria’s Latrobe Valley and New South Wales’ Hunter Valley.

Peter Whiteford holds a position at the Crawford School of Public Policy at the Australian National University. Peter has worked at the Social Policy Research Centre at the University of New South Wales, as an Adviser of the Minister for Social Security (1995–1996) and as a Consultant to the Social Security Review. Previously, he worked in Australian government departments and numerous research centres overseas. Peter was appointed by the Australian government to the Reference Group for the Review of the Australian Pension System in 2008.

John Woinarski is a Professor of Conservation at Charles Darwin University, and holds a PhD from Monash University. John has studied the fauna and flora of the Top End of the Northern Territory for almost 30 years. He has surveyed the vertebrate flora and fauna of the region and documented the results in over 100 scientific papers, and was the senior author of The Nature of Northern Australia. John was awarded the Australian Natural History medal in 2011.

Johanna Wyn is the Director of the Youth Research Centre at the University of Melbourne. Johanna specialises in longitudinal research on young people, documenting their transitions across the dimensions of education, work, wellbeing, relationships and family life. Her research is policy-focused and she is interested in developing new research and policy approaches to chronic patterns of disadvantage among youth. She is a member of the Academy of Social Sciences Australia.

Martin Young is a Senior Lecturer with the Centre for Gambling Education and Research (CGER) at Southern Cross University. He is also affiliated with the Menzies School of Health Research (Darwin) and the Australian National University. Prior to taking up his position at Southern Cross University in 2011, Martin led the Northern Territory gambling research program. He has been a committee member of the National Association for Gambling Studies and editor of the journal Gambling Research. His research focuses on the social and spatial impacts of poker-machine venues.

John Zerilli holds a Masters degree in Jurisprudence and Moral Theory from Cambridge University and a Masters degree in Philosophy of Science and Evolutionary Epistemology from Sydney University. He is the author of The Economic Imperative (2011) and has written articles for various publications, including Arena Journal and Quadrant. He was cited in a submission to the Australian Senate's Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee in 2012. He is currently writing a doctoral dissertation on neuro-linguistics and philosophy at the Australian National University.